447/2015 Sana Zulfiqar & Dr. Uzaira Rafique, Pakistan.—“Purification and esterification of spent frying oil by using fatty acid modified Rice Chaff mergers”.

143432

The present invention suggests a designing of product based moiety upon the utilization of agricultural source (rice chaffs mergers) and free fatty acids (stearic acid, myristic acid, oleic acid) and considered as effectual and cost-effective adsorbents for purification of biofuel. Spent frying oil contained lots of free fatty acids, mostly mono-alkyl esters of long and short chain fatty acids alcohol and it is important to purify it to overcome heart problems (attacks, strokes) and environmental issues (water pollution) in Pakistan. In past, purification and recycling of biofuel was challenging but with the advent of different materials (adsorbents) designed from various agricultural sources seems to be an economical means for spent frying oil purification. The economical benefits enlisted for using agro-based adsorbents are low cost of precursors, high conversion rate, and reduced consumption of energy. This is because agricultural sector of Pakistan provide more than 600 million tons of rice straw annually which is utilized as raw material for the production, of paper and incineration. The present invention describes the purification of spent frying oil using rice chaff mergers as adsorbents. For this purpose, spent frying oil was directly and indirectly trans-esterified converted into adsorbent and processed through series of chemical tests such as Iodine Number (IN), Peroxide Value (PV), and fatty acid (FA) to make biofuel. The results determine through RP-UFLC suggested lower peroxide value, low iodine number and reduced fatty acids content for indirect trans-esterified spent frying oil as compared to direct trans-esterified spent frying oil. The contextual value of fatty acids in spent oil (22.3mg/g) was higher than fatty acids modified rice chaff mergers (< 6mg/g) suggesting the successful purification of spent frying oil via agro-based adsorbents. Furthermore, lower iodine values enhanced the commercial viability of biofuel in the petroleum industry due to increase in its shelf life. The present invention is cost effective and greener approach towards the reduction and recycling of raw agricultural sources into useful products (adsorbents).

469/2015 BAYER PHARMA AKTIENGESELLSCHAFT, Germany.—“Process for preparing (4S)-4-(4-cyano-2-methoxyphenyl)-5-ethoxy-2,8-dimethyl-1,4-dihydro-1,6-naphthyridine-3-carboxamide”.
